(a) Reasons of invasion

(b) Invasion and events

(c) Effects of invasion

Answer:

(a) Reasons of invasion:

- Devgiri was a prosperous city in the South.
- King Ramadevarai Yadava was ruling over Devgiri.
- Alauddin attacked Devgiri in 1296 C.E.
- In face of the sudden attack, Ramadevarai took shelter in the fort of Devgiri (Daulatabad). Alauddin seized the fort and plundered the city.
- Alauddin conquered nearby provinces of Devgiri as well and collected a large booty as part of the treaty.

(b) Invasion and events:

- Ramadevarai, the ruler of Devgiri had stopped paying tribute to Alauddin for some time.
- So Alauddin sent his commander Malik Kafur to the South.
- There were political and economic reasons behind this campaign.
- The most important reason was to subdue the Yadavas and to collect tribute from them.

(c) Effects of invasion:

- Alauddin had increased his army in size.
- He was the first Sultan to set up a permanent standing army on a large scale.
- He devised new economic reforms for controlling market prices.
- These new measures created a heavy strain on the state treasury.
- It was also necessary to keep the newly increased army and its officers are busy by planning new campaigns.
